PUBLIC REGISTRATION PORTAL

Course catalogue: three directions

The same 222 courses, the same data, three ways of putting them in front of a seafarer. Every page in this deck is a live page rendered by the browser — not a drawing of one.

- A Manifest — the catalogue you have, made findable
- B Deck Cards — browse by how many days it takes
- C Ship's Index — all 222 on one page, no paging

Manifest

The catalogue that ships today, made findable. The three-table layout is kept exactly as built — what changes is everything around it.

WHAT CHANGES

- Search moves into the hero — the first thing on the page
- Day and mode filter chips above the table
- Head row stays pinned while you scroll
- Rows are clickable and reveal Enroll →

WHAT STAYS

- Three side-by-side tables, rows locked together
- 15 courses a page, 15 pages
- Days centred, mode centred
- “Other courses may be available” footer

Build cost: lowest. Mostly CSS, plus two filter handlers over the catalogue that already exists. Nothing about the data or the enrollment flow changes.

Deck Cards

The table becomes a card grid, grouped by how long each course takes — because “what can I finish before I join?” is the question between contracts.

WHAT CHANGES

- One course per card: title, days, mode, Enroll
- Grouped by length — one day, two days, six and longer
- Popular course shortcuts under the search box
- Paging replaced by “show all 64 one-day courses”

TRADE-OFFS

- Best of the three on a phone
- Fewer courses visible at once on a desktop
- Catalogue stops being a scannable reference table
- Largest rewrite of the three

Build cost: highest. New render function and grouping logic. Worth it if the catalogue is meant to sell courses rather than list them.

Ship's Index

No paging at all. All 222 courses on one page, grouped A–Z, with a letter rail and a filter box that narrows the list as you type.

WHAT CHANGES

- Every course on one page, grouped A–Z
- Letter rail down the side; headings pin as you scroll
- Type to filter — the list narrows instantly
- Ctrl+F finds anything; nothing hides on page 9

WHY IT SUITS THIS BUSINESS

- The whole list can be screenshotted and sent on Messenger
- Applicants usually arrive knowing the course name already
- Deletes the pager and its page-window logic
- Cost: one long page instead of fifteen short ones

Build cost: low — it removes code. The pager, the page clamping and the ellipsis windowing all go away and are replaced by one filter.

CONCEPT C — SHIP'S INDEX

TB MARITIME · COURSE CATALOGUE

Which one, and why

All three show the same 222 courses with the same three facts — course, days, mode of training. They differ in how a seafarer gets to the one they need.

	A — MANIFEST	B — DECK CARDS	C — SHIP'S INDEX
Courses per screen	15	4–8 cards	~12, all 222 on the page
Finding a named course	Search + filter chips	Search + shortcuts	Type to filter, or Ctrl+F
“What fits in 2 days?”	Filter chip	Yes — it is the structure	Filter box
Enroll from the catalogue	Row hover	Button on every card	Button on every row
On a phone	Fits 375px, tight	Best of the three	Fits, long scroll
Screenshot the list	15 screenshots	Awkward	One long screenshot
Build effort	Lowest	Highest	Low — deletes code
Risk to what works	Almost none	Full rewrite of the view	Pager removed

Recommendation. Ship Concept A and take Concept C’s filter-as-you-type with it. A is the smallest change to code that already works, and the filter chips fix the real problem: nobody pages through fifteen screens to find a course they were told to take by name. Keep Concept B in reserve — it is the better shop window if the catalogue is ever meant to sell courses rather than list them.

One open question before any of this ships. The Mode of Training column now reads “Face to face” for every course the price matrix does not describe. That is the house default you confirmed, and it is on 76 of the 222 listings. If any of those are in fact delivered blended or by distance learning, the catalogue is telling applicants the wrong thing — worth one pass through the list before it goes public.
